A PIONEER'S HISTORY.

Reminiscences of Early Life in the Wilds of British Columbia.

Moses Ireland's Hardships—Narrow Escapes—A Veritable Hero.

(Written for THE TIMES.)

CHAPTER I.

The history of the opening up of our Province by the hardy miner, and of the hardships and perils experienced and not always survived by the adventurous prospector, is one that will never be fully written. It is one, moreover, that possesses an irresistible fascination for all classes of readers, and one that is invested with patriotic interest to the rapidly increasing numbers who are making this, as yet, undeveloped Province the land of their adoption and the home of their families. Unless soon rescued from oblivion by being committed to "the immortal custody of the Press," those tales of enterprise and endurance which were wont to beguile the evening hours spent around the camp fires of those noble pioneers to whom our young country owes so much, will, ere long, linger as only half remembered traditions in the recollections of a succeeding generation. Of the many deeds of daring and valor, on the thrilling memory of which the miners of early days love to dwell, none are, we think, more worthy of being recorded than those which were performed under singularly trying circumstances by a gentleman now resident in this city. An incorrect version of some of the facts was published shortly after they occurred. They deserve an authentic transcription and will be new to most of our readers. Our hero has the rare satisfaction of having been the instrument, in the exercise of his own individual strength of muscle and will, of rescuing from circumstances of extreme peril over seventy-five persons who, but for his self-forgetful bravery and extraordinary powers of endurance, must inevitably have perished.

Mr. Moses C. Ireland, a native of Sebec, Maine, entered upon his gold mining career during the exciting times of California's early days, where he soon became possessed of a competency and returned to his eastern home. The passion for "fooling with the chances" (which Josh Billings gives as a reason why some people get married), for which gold mining supplies an honest sphere and which every true miner acquires, having possessed Mr. Ireland, and which his success had quickened, it was not possible that he should remain contented amid the hum-drum of staid eastern life. He hastened back to the Pacific Coast and after three years more of California life, resolved to strike for the comparatively unexplored wilds of British Columbia, where the incidents about to be narrated took place.

The autumn of 1862 finds him in Cariboo. The winter of that year set in suddenly and the cold was very severe. The miners, thus warned, hastened their departure for Victoria, taking with them a limited supply of food, their blankets and their gold. For purposes of mutual protection and assistance it was usual in those days to travel in considerable companies. Ireland's party, however, consisted on this occasion of himself and five companions only. On reaching Bald Mountain a terrific snow storm came on and nearly overwhelmed them. By the time they had reached the summit the snow had fallen to a depth of three feet. Though the traveling was now extremely laborious, it was evident from the tolerably distinct appearance of a trail which the more recent snow had not altogether obliterated, that a large party was at no very considerable distance in advance of them. Despite this fact, Ireland felt convinced that they were out of their course, being too far to the left. His companions, however, preferred to follow in the course which the party in advance had taken. Continuing on about half a mile further they came up to a party, consisting of thirty-nine men and three women, encamped in the snow and lost. The women were well known to the pioneers as members of the Cusheon family.

The question of their whereabouts was now earnestly discussed. The point they wished to gain was a wayside house, situated at the foot of the mountain, well known to all of them as "The Niggers." But how were they to get there? Which course must they take? As is usual with bewildered and lost travelers in prairie or forest, all sorts of contradictory opinions were strennously maintained by those who held them. On one point alone were all, except Ireland, agreed, viz., that the course he had previously indicated was certainly wrong. With the courage of his conviction he determined to test its correctness and started off. He had not proceeded far before five companions fell into line, determined, in the face of their own mental protestations and misgivings, to accept and share with him the consequences of his decision. His encouraging assurances they would fain trust and, though the die is cast, the most they can do is to hope that he may be right. Once again, when about to descend the mountain side, they enter their earnest protest against the course he has chosen. And again his judgment prevails only by resolving itself into action. Having allowed him to proceed alone a short distance, they once more take up the hurried pursuit—afraid of being left to themselves in the confusion and terror which their indecision occasions. Presently a halt is called; one of the party having fallen from sheer exhaustion, is unable to proceed. Night is approaching and a fire must be built. Meantime Ireland gives directions to have the man wrapped in blankets, and begins to chop, when, to their infinite surprise and delight, they hear at a little distance the report of a gun, then another, and presently a third. It means that the "house of refuge" is just at hand. The proprietors thought that, owing to the great storm, some miners might be lost and took this method of indicating the location of the house. All hands at once make a break for the welcome quarters—even the exhausted man in the blankets is seen suddenly disrobed, and with a fleetness begotten of the new inspiration, outspeeds his companions and is the first to reach the desired haven. Here they enjoy shelter, warmth, food and such sound and refreshing sleep as only weary men can know.

The early morning, however, brings them face to face with the problem of saving the large party who are so many weary miles away on the mountain and in the snow. Taking with them a supply of such provisions as the house afforded, they set out to retrace the toilsome and dispiriting journey of the preceding day. When they had reached the summit the wind was blowing a gale, the snow flew in blinding clouds and the courage of the men again forsook them. It was then noon, and the men unanimously declared themselves unable to follow their leader any further on the journey. They urged him to turn back with them, declaring that if he would not they must return without him. What could he do? The lives of the forty-two people depended on his decision. If he listened to the entreaties of his companions and turned back, they must assuredly perish. Without a moment's hesitation on his part, Ireland shouldered his pack and went forward alone. Fatigue, however extreme, must not be considered. He had the great advantage now of knowing the way. The hopeless ones whom he seeks know not what direction to take, and at all cost and risk they must be relieved and saved. All the rest of the day through the raging storm he pursued his lonely and weary way. Just at dark he reached them and distributed among them the food which he had carried in his pack. He is told that in the morning two of their number had started out in search of the wayside house. These Ireland had not seen. He proposed to go back at once and get help to bring the whole party out. Fearing that he might not find them again if he left them, they clung to him like children and earnestly urged him to pass the night with them and pilot them out in the morning. Ireland felt that in their present weakened condition they were quite unequal to the journey, and told them he must lose no time in procuring men and food and that with all possible speed he would return to them. With many misgivings they yielded to these representations. Once more our hero, without stopping to rest, or waiting for the morning, retraced his steps to the inn.

After travelling for about three hours, he noticed some tracks in the snow crossing his way. Looking in the direction of them he saw a light in a tree and rightly conjectured that the tracks were those of the men who had set out that morning from the lost party. Approaching them, he found that they had been wandering about all day, but failing to find the way and having no axe, had succeeded in setting fire to a dry tree, where they concluded to remain till it was consumed, after which they expected to freeze to death. Their feelings when Ireland informed them he could pilot them out, may be better imagined than described. How near they were to the point of extreme helplessness will be understood when the reader is told that for a distance of about two miles the poor fellows clambered through the snow on their hands and knees till they reached the edge of the mountain, where their task became easier, as they could then stumble along on their feet, or even roll down the incline of the mountain side. About midnight they reached their place of refuge. Here, providentially, were twenty-five men who had just arrived from the mines on their way to the coast. These Ireland engaged to go with him to the relief of the imprisoned party. Taking a few hours' rest they set out early in the morning, and after great labor and fatigue succeeded in reaching the famishing ones about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. A good meal and a sense of strong help greatly revived the despondING creatures, and they prepared to return at once. On the return they were enabled to make a much better speed, as the snow was partially trodden down by the rescuing party in going to the camp, and by about dark they had the satisfaction to bring to a close one of the most perilous experiences in the history of British Columbia.

In bringing in the lost ones, an incident occurred which still further illustrates the pluck and endurance of Ireland. On setting out they formed into line with the twenty-five strong fresh men in the van, who trod down the snow, making it comparatively easy for the sufferers to follow in their track. They had proceeded in this way about a mile when Ireland was informed that one of the party, at the rear of the line, a stout girl about fourteen years of age, had given out and was unable to walk. It is almost incomprehensible that upon Ireland, in this instance again, should be allowed to fall the brunt of the new perplexity. But so it was. Although he had led to a place of safety the five original companions of his journey, who, after having food and rest, abandoned him on his return to the rescue of the large party; although he had four times made the trip between the camp of the lost and the wayside inn, yet now, on this his fifth trip, not one of the twenty-five fresh men of the rescuing party could be induced to assist in carrying this exhausted girl. But, in order to save her life, Ireland was obliged to carry this heavy burden every step of the distance of six miles until the place of safety was once more reached. No one will wonder that Mr. Ireland should have said in speaking of this herculean task, (and a very Hercules he must have been to have accomplished it at all) that he felt had it been necessary to save his life to have borne one hundred yards further, he could not have done it.

This story of endurance, at once heroic and humane, which partakes so largely of the marvelous and borders so closely on the incredible that no writer of sober fiction would dare to imagine the like and expect to be regarded as confining himself to the realm of the possible—could not be credited but for the number of living persons cognizant of all the facts who can vouch for their correctness. It is not to be supposed that those most immediately concerned were lacking in their appreciation of the extraordinary powers of endurance which their deliverer had evinced, and of the determination he had shown to put those powers, in the holy cause of humanity, to their severest test. Their demonstration of thankfulness knew no bounds. One, named Wilcox, drew his purse from his pocket, laid one thousand dollars on the table and said, "this is the way I show my thankfulness, but it is not all I'm going to do." One of the Cusheon's immediately put down a similar amount. Many other purses were at once in hand, all anxious in this practical way to reward the one man of all those acquainted with their extreme peril, who united in himself the qualities of mind and heart and strength necessary to their rescue. Like all truly noble souls capable of great deeds of sacrifice and valor, the consciousness of having done a worthy deed was, to Ireland, its own greatest reward and highest satisfaction. In comparison with this consciousness, gold is dross. Indeed, the acceptance of it might seem to introduce, though not necessarily, a mercenary element at which the mind of disinterested goodness revolts. Ireland, who could not but experience a feeling of satisfaction at this prompt and sincere expression of their sense of obligation to him, most positively and decidedly declined to accept a single cent of their money.

It is night, at the close of one of the rapidly shortening days of our northern October days, and we take our leave of the large number, deliverers and delivered, who with overflowing grateful hearts and wearied frames have yielded themselves up to "tired nature's sweet restorer—balmy sleep," amid the humble comforts of the modest wayside house, which, to the eyes of some of its present inmates, has become transfigured to a palace.

IMPRESSIONS OF B. C.

A Thought on the Principles of Moral and Social Progress.

We do not purpose at this time to refer to our impressions of the physical aspects of this country. Stories of its rivers, rocks, rails, and ranges, its caves and canons, farms and forests, mines and minerals have been told by priests and politicians, servants and senators, for decades. The moral aspect has not been so widely circulated or so eloquently discussed. Standing upon this platform, we dare not admit every prospect of pleasing, yet there are redeeming features. We shall not employ our vocabulary in framing anathemas against the glaring evils, by no means peculiar to, but far too abundant along the Pacific Slope; but would suggest, particularly to that part of the population enjoying the franchise, and to the young men and women of today, a more careful study of the principles which tend to [illegible] a nation in purity and peace. If [illegible] from the history of the past, or from the records of to-day, that Sabbath desecration, drunkenness and immorality, establish a nation, then why legislate against them? If, on the other hand, they are enemies to the common cause, and detrimental to a nation's progress, then why permit them? Surely there is in British Columbia moral courage enough to defy the forces of evil everywhere so prominent. Then why put to one side the challenge? If we say there is not, why such glowing returns from the churches and like institutions of our Province, and where is the believer's faith? When evil surrounded our fathers they organized, and in their organizations they prayed the great Ruler of the universe to "Confound the politics and frustrate the knavish tricks" of their enemies; and they were confounded. Today the Union Jack of England floats over a purer and better people than ever in the past. The rose, shamrock and thistle are exerting, even in spite of political agitation and unrest, a nobler and higher influence than history has yet recorded. Shall not the maple, pine and the cedar put forth their branches in an atmosphere of purity and in a land of righteousness and peace? Let us, in this jubilee year, rally our forces and charge the armies of the evil one until our land is free from the slavery of sin, and is as pure as the snow that often mantles it.

THAT TUMBLE-DOWN LOCK-UP.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES:

SIR—To your report of the case of Ah Kin, in the issue of your paper of yesterday's date, you attach a rider, in which you cast reflection on the construction of the new brick cells, blaming the mechanic for the ginger bread structure and only blaming the Police Committee for accepting the work. In order to correct the aspersion on myself I take this early opportunity of stating that my instructions were, as per contract, to build the cells one brick thick; also that the work has not yet been passed nor the account paid. The Police Committee or the Council are thus the only parties blamable in the matter, as the work is well done according to instructions.

Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness and Hay Fever.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are cured in from one to three simple applications made at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on receipt of stamp, by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King street West, Toronto, Canada.—Christian Standard.

HAWAIIAN REBELLION.

The Populace Demand and Secure the Ministers' Resignation.

The Demands Upon the King—Free Elections and a Free Parliament.

THE HAWAIIAN REVOLUTION.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 9.—The steamship Mariposa, which arrived from Australia this morning, having touched at Honolulu, brings important information. The revolution has actually commenced in the Hawaiian kingdom. On June 25th the populace organized by appointing a people's committee, which at once assumed police jurisdiction over the kingdom. The volunteer military companies joined in the movement, and all the guns and ammunition arriving on ships from Australia and the United States were seized. A mass meeting was held on June 30th, at which a demand was made for the downfall of the Gibson Ministry and a new constitution, or the abdication of the King. The King called a meeting of the American Minister and other foreign government representatives on June 30th, and offered to transfer to them all powers vested in him as King. They declined, but advised the King to lose no time in forming a new Cabinet and constitution, which would meet the demands of the people. The King addressed the committee appointed by the populace, announcing that Walter M. Gibson and other members of the Cabinet had resigned, and that he had appointed Wm. L. Green, Prime Minister. Gibson and his son-in-law, P. H. Hayselden, were arrested by the civic troops on July 1st and are now under guard.

The populace assumed control of the affairs of the kingdom on June 25th and were joined by rifles, and they hastily organized military companies. Patrols were established throughout the city and guards were placed over the military armories. On the afternoon of June 30th a mass meeting was held at the armory of the Honolulu rifles, the meeting having been advertised by posters in English, Hawaiian and Portuguese, and long before the hour of meeting the approaches to the building were thronged with all classes of people. All stores and shops had been closed and all approaches to the palace had been barricaded, but the royal troops made no sign of meeting the volunteer troops outside of the armory. Back of the platform were displayed the Hawaiian, American and English languages, and resolutions were adopted declaring as follows:

The administration of the Hawaiian Government has ceased through corruption and incompetence to adequately perform the functions and afford protection to personal property rights, for which all governments exist.

The meeting formulated the following demands on the King: First, that he should at once, and unconditionally dismiss his present cabinet from office, and be asked that he shall call one of the following persons, namely, Wm. L. Green, Henry Waterhouse, Godfrey Brown, or Mark P. Robinson, to assist him in selecting a new cabinet, which shall becommitted to the policy of securing a new constitution. Second, that Walter M. Gibson shall be dismissed from each and every office held by him under the government. The third and fourth demands were that the King should make restitution for the $71,000 of opium bribe money, and dismiss Junius Kaai, registrar of conveyance, who was implicated in the bribery. Fifth, that we request a specific pledge from the King that he will not in future interfere either directly or indirectly with election of representatives and that he will not interfere or attempt to unduly influence the legislature or ministers. The demands were turned over to the committee of thirteen who made their way to the palace and submitted them to the King. The news had already reached the palace, and the Gibson ministry at once wrote out their resignations. During the progress of the mass meeting speeches were made by all prominent citizens who openly declared that the King must abdicate at once or accede to popular demands. Before the meeting closed, the fallen minister Gibson sent a request for a guard of Honolulu rifles to protect him at his residence against the mob of native Hawaiians. On Friday, July 1st, the steamer Mariposa arrived from Australia bringing 200 stand of arms addressed to the Gibson ministry. There were seized by the people's committee and stored in the armory of the Honolulu rifles.

PADDINGTON ELECTION.

LONDON, July 9.—The Daily News is jubilant over the result of the Paddington election. The Daily Telegraph says the Gladstonian gain is probably due to the Cass affair, while the morning Post attributes it to the popularity of Routledge, the Gladstonian candidate. The Standard says the result need occasion neither surprise nor concern when all the circumstances are taken into account. Looking at the position generally it may be said the national league is dangerous despotism. Possibly before the year is out these English politicians who have been duped by its devices will confess that it is a discreditable imposture.

BOULANGER'S ADMIRERS.

REVIEW AT ALDERSHOT.

The Queen to-day reviewed 6,000 soldiers at Aldershot. Her Majesty was received with great enthusiasm. Large numbers of stands were erected at different points of view, and they were filled with fashionable people. The spectacle was very imposing, and the review a grand success. The Duke of Cambridge, in behalf of the troops, presented her Majesty with a jubilee address, the men cheering heartily during the presentation. The marching of the men was splendid and the guards, miners and volunteers were loudly cheered by the spectators.

VIRGINIA, July 9.—At eight o'clock the blast was fired and a hole broke through the full size of the drift. Superintendent Linnman and several miners looked through the opening and found they were in the long sought cross-cut. Lanterns were lighted and candles held in the opening at arms' length, but were instantly extinguished, while the temperature was as torrid as that of a heated oven. To attempt to remain in the cross cut any length of time with a supply of pure air would be certain death and the men who looked in were forced to withdraw their heads from the opening. Pipes are now being led into the cross-cut and a strong current of pure air will be forced through them by a compressor. It will probably be noon to-morrow before the bodies of the victims will be recovered. It is positive now they were asphyxiated very soon after the fire occurred.

EIGHTY THOUSAND PEOPLE.

PARIS, July 9.—The demonstration made last evening on the occasion of the departure of General Boulanger has made a sensation and is regarded as a forerunner of a future manifestation during the coming July. The national government organ is condemning Gen. Boulanger for permitting the demonstration, which numbered 80,000 people.

A Shooting Accident.

A few minutes before noon to-day as Mr. T. J. Barnes, who was driving in from the outer wharf in a buggy, he was hailed by ladies, who were in a great state of excitement, and asked to drive with all haste for a physician. The cause for their alarm Mr. Barnes ascertained to be due to the fact that a young lad, son of a Mr. Dobbe, residing in the neighborhood of St James' Church, James Bay, and well known in connection with the Blue Ribbon Society, had shot his sister, a mere child of three years, in the face. With all haste Mr. Barnes drove to the surgery of Dr. Davie, Langley street, and finding that gentleman in at once drove him to the scene of the accident. The doctor made an examination of the little sufferer, whose eye was seriously injured as well as her face and forehead burned from the effect of the flash of the powder. The doctor had the face washed and lotions applied. He says that in a day or two the little girl will be all right again. It appears the boy was playing with the gun, which was loaded with powder only. A cap was secured by him in some clandestine manner, which he placed on the nipple, and drawing the trigger the contents went off into his sister's face. Had a ball been in the barrel the result would undoubtedly have been fatal. This is another warning to parents to prevent children handling firearms.

Drowned.

A French-Canadian, named Joseph Desermo, was drowned at the dry dock, Esquimalt, this forenoon. He was engaged in winding up the doors of the dump scow, when the lever slipped and he fell into the water. He was not missed until noon, when the men procured grappling irons and the body was recovered about 3 p. m. He was about 25 years of age, a native of St. Vincent de Paul, and came to this province with Messrs. Larkin, Connolly & Co.

MR. BURGESS' VISIT.

Mr. A. M. Burgess, Deputy Minister of the Interior, and Mr. H. H. Smith, Dominion Lands Commissioner, of Winnipeg, returned to the east this morning. They were a week in this city, and in that time were kept quite busy with matters in connection with the Department of the Interior—a branch of the public service in which Manitoba, the Territories and British Columbia, more than any of the other sections of the Dominion, are interested in. Their visit was one of more than ordinary importance. Mr. Burgess, as the actual administrator of the affairs of the Department of the Interior, and under whose purview all matters in relation to the Dominion Lands must be adjudicated, was determined to pay British Columbia a personal visit in order to be the better enabled to pronounce judgment upon the many claims laid before him by members of the Commons, Senators and others, relative to squatters and settlers holding adverse claims to Dominion lands. On their arrival in the province no time was lost in beginning investigations. Many intricate cases were laid before them at New Westminster, but happily they were of such a nature that the great experience these gentlemen have acquired enable them to speedily, and satisfactorily, adjust all cases laid before them. The Port Moody squatters' claims were considered. It was decided to grant a patent to such as were bona fide homestead pre-emptors on these lands upon their complying with the law regulating the disposal of Dominion lands in this province. The claims of others within the railway belt, on both sides of the river beyond Port Moody, were so arranged that the honest settler will experience no hardships or difficulty in dealing with his property. The terms and conditions of the Act, however, will be rigidly enforced. Settlers who are on homesteads, and whose patents have not yet been issued, selling timber to loggers for the saw mills will have to submit to the regulations as applied in Manitoba, the Territories, Ontario and Quebec—that of paying a stumpage license. There will be no interference or hindrance with settlers chopping and burning the standing timber on their pre-emptions. In settling disputed claims, priority was in every case considered. The surveying of the lands is being pushed vigorously and will be continued until the work is completed.

So far as the matters in dispute between the Provincial and the Dominion Governments are concerned the progress towards a settlement was not as satisfactory as the public expected they would be when a personal interview took place between the representatives from Ottawa and the members of the Government here. The Sumas Reclamation scheme was discussed, as well as the position the land embraced within its provisions stood in relation to both governments. Mr. Burgess, on behalf of the Federal government, held that these lands, having reverted back to the Province, in consequence of the non-fulfillment of the dyking contract, were now the property of the Dominion and will accordingly be administered by his department.

The dispute in regard to ownership of the precious metals and timber within the railway belt was also discussed, but with no satisfactory results. The government here are of the opinion that the right to administer there within the railway belt is vested in the Crown, which they contend is this Province. On the other hand the Dominion claims that the provisions of the British North America Act, the terms of Union and the Settlement Bill, give the Crown—the Dominion of Canada—sole and absolute control of the area known as the railway belt. It is contended by the Ottawa authorities that as the Provincial Government has not the right or power to tax these lands it has no authority vested in it for the control or management of the minerals or any other substance within the specified area. Both of the visitors and the provincial members at present in the city were so decided in their convictions that it is now certain an appeal will be made to the courts for a decision. So that British Columbia is likely to follow the course of Ontario in her contentions for that which the government claim to be our just rights.

It will be a satisfaction to the settlers on the lands of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway to know that every matter between the Dominion Government and the Local Government and Mr. Dunsmuir has been adjusted. During the visit of Mr. Burgess he held repeated interviews with Mr. Dunsmuir, which were of so satisfactory a nature that on Wednesday Mr. Burgess handed over to Mr. Dunsmuir all the documents relating to his title to the lands embraced within the railway belt on Vancouver Island. The money paid by the settlers on account of the purchase of their lands, and which was deposited with the Deputy Receiver-General to the credit of the Railway Company, by instructions from Mr. Burgess, as representing the government, was checked out to Mr. Dunsmuir. This closes the account between British Columbia and the Dominion, in so far as the construction of the Island railway stipulated in the Settlement Bill is concerned. Mr. Dunsmuir is clear of, and free from, any controlling influence by either governments and can now proceed with the administration of his lands as he may deem proper. Until next December the price of all unclaimed lands within the railway belt is limited to $1 per acre. After that period the regulation and the price rests with the company.

BALANCE OF TRADE.

Political writers and economists in the United States are becoming greatly alarmed over the fact that the balance of trade has been against that country for some time, and is increasing at an extraordinary rate. During last April the excess value of merchandise imports over exports was $15,973,975, and for May it was $15,233,675, making for only two months no less than $31,200,000. And recent revelations have shown that even that is much under the real sum. According to the best authorities the imports are undervalued by at least $10,000,000 a month; and the fact is almost beyond cavil or question. Thus the balance of trade during April and May may be truly stated as amounting to over $51,000,000 against the highly protected United States.

This is a fact well worthy the best consideration of all commercial men. Does it not appear to them as an indication that, notwithstanding the high protective tariff in force there, foreign manufacturers can successfully compete in the American markets, while it is at the same time rendering it impossible for those there to compete in foreign markets? Workingmen should also consider whether it does not also reveal to them the cause why so large a proportion of their time every year is spent in idleness. Do they not perceive that the fruits of their labors can only be exposed in the home market? If even these foreign manufacturers, after paying freight and high import duty, can successfully compete in their markets, how can the manufacturers of the Union expect to dispose of profitably any surplus stock in foreign markets? The protective tariff is believed to maintain a high rate of wages, but then it also limits the supply to home consumption. That no doubt will increase with the population, but then the number of workmen increases in less proportion; so that relief from that source cannot be expected. The question is also worthy of their consideration whether the British workman under free trade, working constantly all the year round, is not in a better position than them. No doubt their wages are nominally less, but then they go very much further than wages do here. If, under free trade, wages were to fall a little in the United States, we have no doubt whatever that house-rents, lodgings, etc., would decline in far greater proportion, and then workingmen would be far better off than now.

But farther, does not this great balance of trade also explain how it comes to be that so much of the capital of the United States is being sunk at present in real estate, or in purely speculative objects, instead of being devoted to manufacturing? Hitherto capital invested in such industries yielded its owners a profitable return, but in few cases it is doing so now. Hence it is being withdrawn and devoted to other purposes. Yes, and workingmen are the sufferers. There is abundance of surplus capital in that country which, but for protective tariffs, might be profitably invested in manufactures, and give employment to the hordes of idle and discontented men, abounding in all the large cities, and hanging on like an insupportable incubus upon the industries. As things are, however, that surplus capital will never be so devoted, but, like the foreign capital now reaching the United States, will continue to be invested in real estate, mortgages, or other securities, thereby doing little, if any, good to workingmen.

METLAKAHTLA.

Mr. W. Duncan, of Metlakahtla, is still in the east endeavoring to enlist the sympathies of the American press and people in behalf of his wards, the Tsimsians. It would seem that his appeal is meeting with some success, judging from the following letters published in the N. Y. World, which journal has started a "Metlakahtla relief fund:"

To the Editor of The World:

Enclosed please find a cheque for $200 for the Metlakahtla public fund. I sincerely trust that all true men and women—all who have a spark of humanity in their bosoms—will respond in full and deep sympathy to the wail of this grievously wronged people. I hope your fund will be contributed to by those who make a sacrifice in giving a dime as well as by those who can better afford thousands. It is easily within the power of the American people, by only a slight sacrifice, to rescue the Metlakahtlans from their dire distress, and to establish them in happy homes in a land of civil and religious freedom. I remain yours very truly, Henry S. Welcome.

June 20th.

To the Editor of the World:

I read the story of "Metlakahtla" in The World of Sunday, June 12, and also the book itself. I can hardly express how deeply I am touched by the cruelty with which the Canadian Government has treated this truly civilized Indian community, and I herewith inclose 50 cents as a humble subscription to a fund to aid these oppressed people. I am, however, sorry that I cannot contribute a larger sum, but as I earn my bread by the toil of my hands, I would find it inconvenient to do so. I hope that my example will be followed, and I am sure that as soon as the story has been read there will be many who will contribute to aid this good cause. Let everybody contribute as much as he or she can and there will soon be enough to greatly aid these people and enable them to regain their lost homes. Yours very respectfully,

Joseph Sachs.

THE STORY OF A MINE.

BY BRET HARTE.

(Copyrighted, 1888, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. and published by arrangements with them.)

Mr. Gashwiler turned white as a sheet, and then flushed again into an apoplectic glow. "Do you dare to say," he began as soon as he could find his tongue and his legs, for in the exercise of his congressional functions these extreme members supported each other—"do you mean to say," he stammered in rising rage, "that you have dared to deceive an American lawgiver into legislating upon a measure connected with a capital offense? Do I understand you to say, sir, that murder stands upon the record—stands upon the record, sir—of this cause to which, as a representative of Remus, I have lent my official aid? Do you mean to say that you have deceived my constituency, whose sacred trust I hold, in inveigling me to hiding a crime from the Argus eyes of justice?" And Mr. Gashwiler looked towards the bell-pull as if about to summon a servant to witness this outrage against the established judiciary.

"Deceive an American lawgiver."

"The murder, if it was a murder, took place before Garcia entered upon this claim, or had a footing in this court," returned Wiles, blandly, "and is no part of the record."

"You are sure it is not spread upon the record?"

"I am. You can judge for yourself."

Mr. Gashwiler walked to the window, returned to the table, finished his liquor in a single gulp, and then, with a slight resumption of dignity, said:

"That alters the case."

Wiles glanced with his left eye at the congressman. The right placidly looked out of the window. Presently he said quietly, "I've brought you the certificates of the stock; do you wish them made out in your own name?"

Mr. Gashwiler tried hard to look as if he were trying to recall the meaning of Wiles' words. "Oh!—ah!—umph!—let me see—oh, yes, the certificates, certainly! Of course you will make them out in the name of my secretary, Mr. Expectant Dobbs. They will perhaps repay him for the extra clerical labor required in the prosecution of your claim. He is a worthy young man. Although not a public officer, yet he is so near to me that perhaps I am wrong in permitting him to accept a fee for private interests. An American representative cannot be too cautious, Mr. Wiles. Perhaps you had better have also a blank transfer. The stock is, I understand, yet in the future. Mr. Dobbs, though talented and praiseworthy, is poor; he may wish to realize. If some—ahem! some friend—better circumstanced should choose to advance the cash to him and run the risk—why it would only be an act of kindness."

"You are proverbially generous, Mr. Gashwiler," said Wiles, opening and shutting his left eye like a dark lantern on the benevolent representative.

"Youth, when faithful and painstaking, should be encouraged," replied Mr. Gashwiler. "I lately had occasion to point this out in a few remarks I had to make before the Sabbath school reunion at Remus. Thank you, I will see that they are—ahem!—conveyed to him. I shall give them to him with my own hand," he concluded, falling back in his chair, as if the better to contemplate the perspective of his own generosity and condescension. Mr. Wiles took his hat and turned to go. Before he reached the door Mr. Gashwiler returned to the social level with a chuckle:

"You say this woman, this Garcia's niece, is handsome and smart?"

"Yes."

"I can set another woman on the track that'll euchre her every time!"

Mr. Wiles was too clever to appear to notice the sudden lapse in the congressman's dignity, and only said with his right eye:

"Can you?"

"By G—d, I will, or I don't know how to represent Remus."

Mr. Wiles thanked him with his right eye, and looked a dagger with his left. "Good," he said, and added persuasively: "Does she live here?"

The congressman nodded assent. "An awfully handsome woman—a particular friend of mine!" Mr. Gashwiler here looked as if he would not mind to have been rallied a little over his intimacy with the fair one; but the astute Mr. Wiles was at the same moment making up his mind, after interpreting the congressman's look and manner, that he must know this fair incognito if he wished to sway Gashwiler. He determined to bide his time, and withdrew.

The door was scarcely closed upon him when another knock diverted Mr. Gashwiler's attention from his proofs. The door opened to a young man with sandy hair and anxious face. He entered the room deprecatingly, as if conscious of the presence of a powerful being, to be supplicated and feared. Mr. Gashwiler did not attempt to disabuse his mind. "Busy, you see," he said shortly, "correcting your work."

"I hope it is acceptable!" said the young man timidly.

"Well—yes—it will do," said Gashwiler; "indeed I may say it is satisfactory on the whole," he added with the appearance of a large generosity; "quite satisfactory."

"You have no news, I suppose," continued the young man, with a slight flush, born of pride or expectation.

"No, nothing as yet." Mr. Gashwiler paused as if a thought had struck him.

"I have thought," he said, finally, "that some position—such as a secretaryship with me—would help you to a better appointment. Now, supposing that I make you my private secretary, giving you some important and confidential business, Eh?"

Dobbs looked at his patron with a certain wistful, dog-like expectancy, moved himself excitedly on his chair seat in a peculiar canine-like anticipation of gratitude, strongly suggesting that he would have wagged his tail if he had one. At which Mr. Gashwiler became more impressive.

"Indeed, I may say that I anticipated it by certain papers I have put in your charge and in your name, only taking from you a transfer that might enable me to satisfy my conscience hereafter in recommending you as my—ahem!—private secretary. Perhaps, as a mere form, you might now, while you are here, put your name to these transfers, and, so to speak, begin your duties at once."

The glow of pride and hope that mantled the cheek of poor Dobbs might have melted a harder heart than Gashwiler's. But the senatorial toga had invested Mr. Gashwiler with a more than Roman stoicism toward the feelings of others, and he only fell back in his chair in the pose of conscious rectitude as Dobbs hurriedly signed the paper.

"I shall place them in my portman-tell," said Gashwiler, suiting the word to the action, "for safe keeping. I need not inform you, who are now, as it were, on the threshold of official life, that perfect and inviolable secrecy in all affairs of state"—Mr. G. here pointed toward his portmanteau as if it contained a treaty at least—"is most essential and necessary."

Dobbs assented. "Then my duties will keep me with you here?" he asked doubtfully.

"No, no," said Gashwiler hastily; then, correcting himself, he added: "that is—for the present—no!"

Poor Dobbs' face fell. The near fact was that he had lately had notice to quit his present lodgings in consequence of arrears in his rent, and he had a hopeful reliance that his confidential occupation would carry bread and lodging with it. But he only asked if there were any new papers to make out.

"Ahem! not at present; the fact is I am obliged to give so much of my time to callers—I have to-day been obliged to see half a dozen—that I must lock myself up and say 'Not at home' for the rest of the day." Feeling that this was an intimation that the interview was over, the new private secretary, a little dashed as to his near hopes, but still sanguine of the future, humbly took his leave.

But here a certain providence, perhaps mindful of poor Dobbs, threw into his simple hands—to be used or not, if he were worthy or capable of using it—a certain power and advantage. He had descended the staircase, and was passing through the lower corridor, when he was made the unwilling witness of a remarkable assault.

It appeared that Mr. Wiles, who had quitted Gashwiler's presence as Dobbs was announced, had other business in the hotel, and in pursuance of it had knocked at room No. 90. In response to the gruff voice that bade him enter, Mr. Wiles opened the door, and espied the figure of a tall, muscular, fiery-bearded man extended on the bed, with the bed clothes carefully tucked under his chin, and his arms lying flat by his side.

Mr. Wiles beamed with his right cheek, and advanced to the bed as if to take the hand of the stranger, who, however, neither by word or sign, responded to his salutation.

"Perhaps I'm intruding?" said Mr. Wiles blandly.

"Perhaps you are," said Red Beard dryly.

Mr. Wiles forced a smile on his right cheek, which he turned to the smiter, but permitted the left to indulge in unlimited malevolence. "I wanted merely to know if you have looked into that matter?" he said meekly.

"I've looked into it and around it and across it and over it and through it," responded the man gravely, with his eyes fixed on Wiles.

"And you have perused all the papers?" continued Mr. Wiles.

"I've read every paper, every speech, every affidavit, every decision, every argument," said the stranger, as if repeating a formula.

Mr. Wiles attempted to conceal his embarrassment by an easy, right handed smile, that went off sardonically on the left, and continued: "Then I hope, my dear sir, that, having thoroughly mastered the case, you are inclined to be favorable to us?"

The gentleman in the bed did not reply, but apparently nestled more closely beneath the coverlids.

"Hev you a friend within call?" interrupted the recumbent man, gently.

"I don't quite understand!" smiled Mr. Wiles. Of course, any name you might suggest——"

"Hev you a friend, any chap that you might waltz in here at a moment's call?" continued the man in bed. "No? Do you know any of them waiters in the house? That's a bell over yan?" and he motioned with his eyes toward the wall, but did not otherwise move his body.

"No," said Wiles, becoming slightly suspicious and wrathful.

"Mebbe a stranger might do? I reckon that's one passin' in the hall. Call him in—he'll do!"

Wiles opened the door a little impatiently, yet inquisitively, as Dobbs passed. The man in bed called out, "Oh, stranger!" and, as Dobbs stopped, said, "Come yar."

Dobbs entered a little timidly, as was his habit with strangers.

"I don't know who you be—nor care, I reckon," said the stranger. "This yer man" pointing to Wiles—"is Wiles. I'm Josh Sibblee of Fresno, member of congress from the Fourth congressional district of California. I'm jist lying here with a derringer into each hand—jist lying here kivered up and holdin' in on'y to keep from blowin' the top o' this d—d skunk's head off. I kinder feel I can't hold in any longer. What I want to say to ye, stranger, is that this yer skunk—which his name is Wiles—hez bin tryin' his d—dest to get a bribe onto Josh, and Josh, outo respect for his constituents, is jist waitin' for some stranger to waltz in and stop the d—dest fight——"

"But, my dear Mr. Sibblee, there must be some mistake," said Wiles, earnestly.

"Mistake? Strip me!"

"No! No!" said Wiles, hurriedly, as the simple-minded Dobbs was about to draw down the coverlid.

"Take him away," said the Hon. Mr. Sibblee, "before I disgrace my constituency. They said I'd be in jail afore I got through the session. Ef you've got any humanity, stranger, shake him out, and pow'ful quick, too."

Dobbs, quite white and aghast, looked at Wiles and hesitated. There was a slight movement in the bed. Both men started for the door, and the next minute it closed very decidedly on the member from Fresno.

Extinct Craters in New Mexico.

The reported volcanic eruption in Arizona makes a recent conversation with ex-Senator Dorsey, of New Mexico, of timely interest. In talking about the mountain ranges the senator said: "There are evidences clear and distinct throughout New Mexico and Arizona of numerous volcanic eruptions in the past. On the plateaus the signs are not so distinct as they are in tracing the formation down the sides of the mountains. The plateaus have become fertile and the evidences of volcanic eruptions have been destroyed, but you can trace the lava as it flowed down the mountain sides, and at the bottom, where it cooled and has formed into rock, the signs are very clear. There are scores of these extinct craters within a few miles of my ranch, and they are dotted all over the mountains in this section."—New York Tribune.

THE SHELTERING ARMS.

VISIT TO A HEBREW GUARDIAN INSTITUTION FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

Everything Wonderfully Clean from Kitchen to Cupola—The Asylum and Its Workings—What the Children Are Taught—The Memorial Light.

"Good afternoon, sir."

The salutation came from a group of ten young girls who were busily sewing in the basement of the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian society's house, avenue A and Eighty-seventh street. Throughout the house and grounds, where 150 girls were at work or at play, the same respectful greeting awaited the reporter. It was pleasingly apparent at the beginning that the management was striving to cultivate in its young wards that graciousness of manner and address which may be so potent a factor in their future advancement.

The matron, Mrs. Brott, whose motherly heart warms to all of her many charges, and who in turn is loved by all the waifs, gave the reporter every opportunity to examine into the asylum and its workings. From kitchen to cupola everything was wonderfully clean. There were no carpets to catch and retain wandering germs of disease, but throughout the building the white pine floors fairly glistened, as the result of their daily scrubbing. The dormitories are models of neatness. Each child has an iron cot, and each cot, with its spotless white counterpane, is a beacon in cleanliness. Every morning clean towels are hung at the foot of the several cots. Every child also has a hair brush and a tooth brush, and is required to use them. The children themselves, even to the little toddlers, were found with clean faces, hands and aprons.

HEALTH OF THE CHILDREN.

The hospital is a bright, sunny room, which overlooks the river, and is daily and hourly purified by health giving breezes. There were no sick in the hospital. Judging from the sturdy, healthful appearance of the girls it will be long before the two hospital cots are brought into use. The managers give especial attention to the health of their wards. When sickness does come they spare no expense to baffle the disease. A year ago, through the carelessness of an attendant, a contagious disease of the eye gained a foothold. Ten trained nuries at $20 per week each were at once employed, and for three months were engaged in battling the disease, which threatened to add blindness to the helplessness of the orphans. The disease was conquered and not an eye was lost.

The children attend the public school in Eighty-sixth street, and are bright and faithful scholars. Their reports are of so high a standard as to indicate more than average ability and fidelity. At home they are instructed in all matters that pertain to housekeeping, with the exception of the heavy work, for which they are not fitted. They wash light articles, iron all their own clothing, do all the mending and repairing, make their own garments, including stockings, gloves, hoods, knit shoes and slippers, and are instructed in all the essentials of plain cooking. When ready to go out in the world they go fully prepared to support themselves.

In addition to their plain needlework, many of the girls have been taught the mysteries of lace making. Their work found ready sale at the recent fair for the benefit of the Montefiore home. The girls are also carefully instructed in all that pertains to their religion, and to that end are taught the Hebrew tongue.

THE BIG PLAYGROUND.

The time of the inmates is not all given to work, however. A large closetful of dolls, gayly dressed, and other toys showed that provision had been made for the rainy days which keep the children inside. But the great resort for fun is the big playground in the rear. Here, free from the observation of the curious, they can romp to their hearts' content. Tag and skipping the rope and playing at school were all in full force on Wednesday, but even the wildest players with laughter dancing eyes paused long enough to greet the visitor with the quiet "Good afternoon, sir."

Across the rear of the yard extended a long tent, under which was a row of tables, where the children eat in summer and fancy they are having a prolonged picnic. The tables were occupied by the play school, but there was enough of the real school work to show the reporter that the children read, write, spell and figure well. In one of the dormitories he observed a beautiful and touching Jewish custom. A gas jet was burning low.

"Do you see that light?" said the matron. "That was lighted last night at 6 and will burn until 6 o'clock to-night. No one is allowed to touch it in that time. To-day is the anniversary of the death of the father of one of our children, and the light is burning in solemn commemoration of that sad event. The children come to me from time to time and ask if they may burn the memorial light. Each year they observe the day as one of mourning and prayer. No one interferes with the light until they come and tell me that the time set apart has expired. The custom is rather fallen into disuse among the American Jews, but Christian as I am, it strikes me as a custom so beautiful and lovely as to be worthy of universal adoption."—New York Sun.

How Barbers Learn Their Trade.

"How do barbers learn their trade?" I asked my barber the other day. "They just pick it up," said he. "A great many do the picking up in the country shops, where the farmers have tough chins or are not so particular as city customers. Then we have boys around the shop to brush coats, give gentlemen their hats and otherwise make themselves useful, and they generally blossom into barbers. First the boy learns to soap faces in a rush and comb hair, and we let him hone up an old razor occasionally. Some day when business is dull the boss lets the boy shave him and after a while a good natured customer drops in or a man trying to catch a train and the boy gets a chance to try his hand. Of course he is extra careful, and unless he is very nervous he makes a good job of it. After that he has no trouble and all the customers accept him as a matter of fact."—Philadelphia Call.

Something to Remember.

A correspondent writes an English journal as follows: "A patient of mine recently swallowed a plate (gold, with two teeth), and I immediately adopted a practice recommended to me some years ago by Sir James Paget in a similar case. I made him eat three good sized slices of bread and swallow four tablespoonfuls of flour and water made into a fairly thick mass. I then administered an emetic, and the teeth returned entangled in the tenacious vomit. I may add that the first one was equally successful, and that something of this sort is habitually done at police stations when prisoners arrested for passing false coins swallow them.—Boston Herald.

The Low Voiced Barber.

There are talkative barbers, but they soon find their level in five cent shops, where the barber is always several cuts above his customers. The average barber I have found to be a cool, collected person, soft of hand and foot, low in voice and chary of speech. Of course he will talk if you will, but you have only to keep your mouth shut and close your eyes and he will shave you in deathly silence. Yet he is very entertaining, providing you don't tempt him on finance, politics or any other subject of which he knows nothing. Get him to talk about himself and he can talk readily and well.—Philadelphia Call.

Among the other exhibits at the New England fair it is proposed to have all the governors from New England. In the language of the irrepressible sideshow man in the circus, "This alone is worth three times the price of admission."

MARINE.

The ship Riverside, from Moodyville, with 1,200,000 feet of lumber for San Diego passed down this morning.

The ship Commodore arrived this morning from San Francisco.

A Crooked Skedaddler.

Recent developments in connection with the absconder, Frank Davis, show him to have been a consummate scoundrel. Several in the city would like to meet him once again and settle old scores. To his best friends he was the most ungrateful, and they are loud in their denunciations of him. To recite his crooked work would fill a volume. He is at present in Tacoma.

English Window Glass, 16 oz., all sizes; also Stained and Enamelled Glass, at Muirhead and Mann's Sash and Door Factory.

A Sad Accident.

News has been received of the death of Mr. John Graham, by the bursting of an emery wheel in his foundry at Sterling, Ont. Mr. Graham was the father of Lieut. Graham, of the Salvation Army detachment now in this city.

Good Investments.

We have several FIRST CLASS BUSINESSES for sale, and those wishing to invest in Victoria should first call on us. PEMBERTON & Co., Fort street, box 634.

A Profitable Venture.

A short time ago mention was made in these columns of a shipment of 550 bags of moss to San Francisco by Mr. Wm. McNeill, of this city. It was the initial shipment and netted the gentleman a handsome profit, thus establishing him on a firm basis to continue the business. He now has an order for 800 bags which will speedily be filled. As well as moss certain varieties of native bark find a market in the Golden State, and Mr. McNeill will also foster the trade in this line. The young man richly deserves encouragement for his enterprise in bringing our native resources before the world and to some practical use. Just think of common moss in the forests that we look on as worthless, and bark on trees regarded as useless, being turned into American gold coin, and then wonder. But these are cold facts.

In Brief and to the Point.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existence. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this and business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember! No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents. *

A Great Treat.

The Philharmonic Club which makes its first appearance in this city at the Victoria this evening has the reputation of being one of the finest companies of solo talent in America. Mr. Richard Arnold, has been for three years a director of the Philharmonic society of New York and is conceded to be one of the finest violinists in the country. Friedhold Herman, is also a member of the society and was for fourteen years connected with Theo. Thomas' orchestra as first violinist. Weiner is an artist in every sense of the word. Emil Schenck is now undoubtedly the best violincellist in America. There no doubt will be a full house to greet them.

Iron, Steel and Coal.

We have to acknowledge the receipt from Messrs. Dawson Brothers, of Montreal, of a large and exceedingly well gotten up pamphlet entitled "The manufacture, consumption and production of iron, steel and coal in the Dominion of Canada, with some notes on the manufacture of iron and on the iron trade in other countries," by James Herbert Bartlett. The work is a valuable one as well for the statistics with which it is fortified as for the valuable information it affords on the subject of Canada's position and facilities, and the history it gives of the industry as it has so far been prosecuted. The work should find many readers in this province of mineral illimitable possibilities.

Granite Creek.

Mr. W. Jensen and Mrs. Jensen returned to the city last night from Granite "City," where they have spent the past year. Business is steadily declining at the Creek, and claims are gradually passing into the hands of the Chinese, who are content with $2 and $3 per day to the hand. There are now not more than 50 white miners in the whole district, principally on Granite and Slate Creeks. The new discoveries on Rock Creek have drawn away many of the miners and business men, and the Similkameen mining camp is almost deserted. There was a large quantity of snow on the Hope Mountain when Mr. Jensen crossed.

Under False Colors.

Now that the Belvidere restaurant has been seized the disclosure is made that the place was to serve for "bucking the tiger" as well as feeding the inner man. The room for faro was tightly closed and the windows heavily curtained. Whether the whilom proprietor or other crafty gamblers infesting the city were to run the game can only be surmised by us, but the latter is more probable. The question now arises whether faro is dealt now or not in this city. The game is illegal.

Look Out for It!

A "shover of the queer" is our midst is a reminder to carefully inspect all silver offered. It is said that as long as a month ago spurious coin was passed in the city on various tradesmen, who failed to detect it as the ring was so near genuine. The coin offered was dollars and the make good, the ring being somewhat clearer than the genuine.

Naval Hospitality.

Admiral Seymour and officers of the fleet at Esquimalt gave an "at home" in the sail loft of the dock yard, Esquimalt, last night, which was largely attended. The room was beautifully decorated, and the company were delighted with their reception, the gentlemanly entertainers vieing with each other in making the event eminently pleasing to their guests.

Dividends Declared.

The half-yearly dividend of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. is announced at the rate of three per cent. It is secured under an agreement with the Dominion Government.

A dividend of 17 shillings per share is announced by the directors of the Hudson's Bay Co. Last year the rate was 15s. per share.

To the Parishioners of St. James.

Please take notice that the Church bell will not be rung for services. The congregation are requested to be guided by the Cathedral bell.

Mr. Cunningham is returning to England after a residence of many years among the Japs, and stopped over at Harrison's Springs to recuperate after the long ocean voyage.

Mr. T. O. Fowler, of the New York, Ogdensburgh and Western Railway, accompanied by his brother, came over the C.P.R. in their private car "Ontario," and will make a tour to Alaska. Mr. Fowler is a prominent politician and railway man and has large interests in Canada. His name was freely mentioned in connection with a high political office in the United States a few years ago.

The Rev. Mr. Miller, of the Presbyterian Church, Nanaimo, who arrived last week from Scotland paid Victoria a flying visit yesterday. He returned this morning. During his stay here he expressed himself pleased with the city and the people he came in contact with. It is expected he will officiate in the Presbyterian Churches here ere long. Victorians will then have an opportunity of hearing him.

Mr. M. B. Ward and wife and Mrs. R. B. Rees, of Walla Walla, are in the city. Mr. Ward is a pioneer of Oregon and also of Walla Walla, and has long been one of the leading citizens of that city. Mrs. Rees is his daughter and the wife of Major Rees, who is widely known in Eastern Washington as one of the substantial business men of Walla Walla, and who has many friends on Puget Sound.

Henry Radge, of Victoria, B. C., says the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, is in the city for a few days' visit. Mr. Radge is one of the principal workers in the Victoria Blue Ribbon Club and has been for the past five years. That club is a model temperance association. It owns a building in which is one of the prettiest halls in the city, and their weekly meetings are largely attended. The best brass band in Victoria is composed of members of the Blue Ribbon Club and it goes without saying that they have an abundance of good music. Mr. Radge is a brother of George Radge, formerly a well known citizen of this city.

The Churches.

The services in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Courtenay street, will be conducted to-morrow morning and evening by the Rev. P. McF. McLeod, of Toronto. This gentleman is one of the most talented and respected ministers of the Presbyterian Church in Toronto. He is a pleasant, graceful speaker, a devout Christian and held in high esteem by his flock.

The bell on St. James' Church, James Bay, will not be rung for the services of to morrow. The congregation are requested to be guided by the Cathedral bell.

Attractions at Fulton Market.

Residents of the city, as well as visitors, should not miss the opportunity of visiting Fulton Market, Johnson street, where are to be seen a collection of monkeys, trained speaking parrots, mocking birds, English thrushes, black birds and sterlings, magpies, and many other species of the singing and feathered tribe. Tourists in want of souvenirs can do no better than give this place a call.

POLICE COURT.

(Before E. Johnson, Q. C., S. M.)

Chas. S. Cumming, charged with enticing men to desert from H. M.'s navy. Allowed out on furnishing $250 bail till the 15th.

Geo. Fenick, an Italian, charged with passing counterfeit money; remanded till the 13th.

Geo. Redford, for being caught in the St. Nicholas Hotel with felonious intentions, was committed for trial.

A Ponderous Locomotive.

The Tacoma Ledger in its Jubilee number contains a cut of the Decapod locomotive, two of which are engaged hauling trains over the Cascade Mountains. The Decapod signifies ten footed and of course refers to the ten drivers which transmit the tractive power of this immense engine. The engine will haul 500 gross tons of 1,120,000 pounds of cars and lading up a straight grade of 105.6 per mile. The actual weight in working order, exclusive of tender, is 144,000 lbs. The actual weight on the driving wheels is 128,000 pounds, and the weight of the engine and tender in working order is 224,000 pounds. The boiler is the largest ever made for a locomotive, and the same is true of many other parts. The Decapod is the first built exclusively for the Northern Pacific Railroad for working a mountain grade.

A Counterfeiter.

The Italian giving the name of Geo. Fenwick was arraigned in court this morning for passing bogus coin. The prisoner is a swarthy looking, thickly built "Daigo" with piercing black eyes. He says he cannot speak English and the services of Mr. Geo. Cicero as an interpreter were called into use. The only evidence taken was that of Serg. Sheppard who testified to the arrest and finding $71 in dollar pieces on his person, mostly bogus. The case was accordingly remanded till Wednesday next. Under the law he cannot get more than three years punishment as the bogus coin is American. If it had been Canadian fifteen years is the maximum penalty.

Where No Man Should be.

Shortly after 2 o'clock this morning William Cooper, of the St. Nicholas Hotel, was startled on hearing a great noise in the hotel kitchen. On making his way hither with a light he there discovered a man where no man should be at that hour of the morning, and especially a white man. He was found to be Geo. Redford, an individual not entirely unknown to the police. His being there at such an unseemly hour, together with the fact that he was an old transgressor, led to the belief that he was after booty. Officer Redgrave took him to the cooler for safe keeping. To-day he was committed for trial.

The Dreaded Fourth Clause.

Mr. Robert Irving, city agent for the O. R. & N. Co., and the Northern Pacific Railway, has been officially notified that until further notice there will be no change in transportation rates—either for passengers or freight—from and to Pacific Coast points over the systems for which he is agent. Thus the operation of the dreaded fourth clause in the Inter-State Commerce Act is still further suspended in so far as the Northern Pacific and other transcontinental lines are concerned; all of which will be an advantage to the traveling and shipping community.

They Did Not Come.

Says the Tacoma Ledger of the 7th inst.: C. B. Wright and party had intended leaving yesterday morning via the Canadian Pacific road for Philadelphia, but owing to a slight illness of Mr. Wright the party did not go. They have now changed their route and expect to leave to-day over the Cascade division of the Northern Pacific line for the east.

For the West Coast.

The steamer Maude will leave this evening for Alberni and Bear river. She carries as freight a quantity of lumber and five tons of merchandise; also three passengers.

In the Asylum.

Mr. F. C. Marshall, for many years a reporter on the Standard and Colonist, is at present in the Royal Hospital. His mind is affected, but we hope only temporarily.

Lecture.

The Rev. P. McFarland McLeod, of Toronto, will lecture in the school room of the First Presbyterian Church on Wednesday evening next, on "That Young Man."

The Pacific Steamer.

The Parthia will arrive from Vancouver on Monday and leave on the same day for Japan and China. She will have a full list of passengers.

Full Houses.

The hotels of the city are pretty full at present. They have guests from all parts of the continent, principally tourists.

Maple Syrup

Direct from the grove of Frelligsburg; the first of the season, NEUFELDER & ROSS. *

Mr. Ezekiel McLeod, ex-Attorney-General of New Brunswick, and the man who advised Returning Officer Dunn to return Baird, the defeated candidate, as member for Queen's county, is in Ottawa. Some say that he wants the Tory nomination in Queen's county, while others are of the opinion that he aims at higher game and wants a judgeship. Possibly Mr. McLeod may be taken into the Cabinet when Mr. Costigan is crowded out.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers does nothing by halves. The Canadian section pay its President, Chief Arthur, now in Ottawa, an annual salary of $5,000 and the Chief devotes all his time to the interests of his working brethren. Since the Brotherhood was established the status of the engineers has wonderfully advanced.
